PANELLED PULLOVER PATTERN DEVELOPMENT

Lines are drawn according to the design to create panels

Initially, it was designed with two panels, but after testing the toile and making some measurement adjustments, we decided to go with a single panel instead.

Raglan sleeve unfold joined to the panels

The panel is extended all the way to the front

Raglan sleeve unfold joined to the panels

Matched with the front panel

The panel is extended all the way to the back

I began the paper patterns using the men's Size 40 basic bodice as a foundation. From there, I sketched the desired shape for the panels. First the patterns are cut separately and given 1CM seam allowance on all the sides

Centre front panel onfold with branding

The dart is included purely for aesthetic purposes to show the lines extending.

Centre front collar

After completing the toile I draped the neck shape out of it for a better fit

1 CM seam allowance is given for all the panels including the one with the raw edges.

PANELLED PULLOVER TOILE DEVELOPMENT

Metal zipper inner pocket

FRONT

I wasn't satisfied with the neck shape we initially created, so I made a few measurement changes.

Raw edge finish

A 6 cm ribbing needs to be added at the hem and sleeve cuffs.

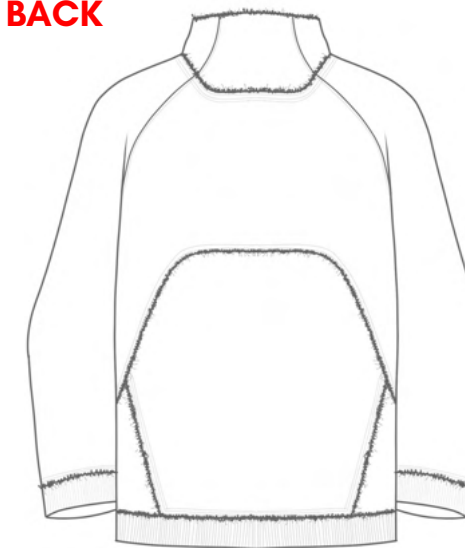

A raw edge finish has been applied.

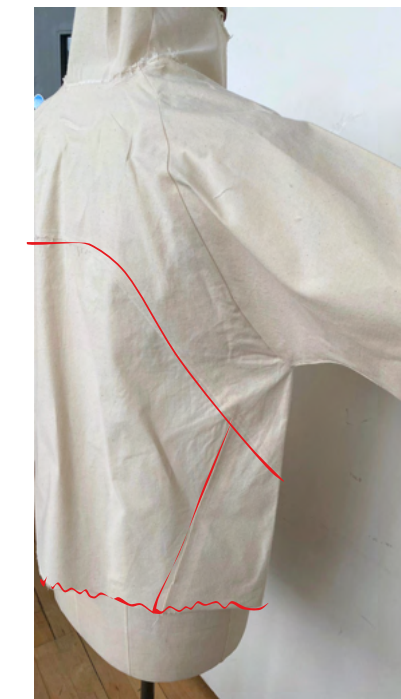

The process began with an initial neck height of 14 cm, but the shape was not visible due to the height. Therefore, it was adjusted to 10 cm to achieve the desired appearance.

BACK

The hem's raw edges will be stitched outward onto the ribbing.

The back panel was sewn on top of the other panel, creating a raw 0.5 CM edge finish.

PANELLED CARGO TROUSER PATTERN & TOILE DEVELOPMENT

I began the paper patterns using the men's basic trouser pattern as a foundation.

I sketched the desired shape for the panels. First the patterns are cut separately and given 1CM seam allowance on all the sides

All the patterns are notched for easy arranging the panels are cut and gave 1 CM seam allowance

4 CM waistband with 1 CM seam allowance on all sides

The dart is being converted into a cut to form the panel shape.

Contrast 1/4 inch stitch detail all over the trouser

The back comes with a welt pocket and a belt

HOODED CROPPED VEST PATTERN & TOILE DEVELOPMENT

Then, I traced the shape onto my paper pattern, making the necessary shape and measurement alterations.

First, I started by drawing the desired shape onto the trial 1 toile to determine the shape and length of the jacket

The panels are being cut separately with a 1 cm seam allowance.

To create the hood, we draped and traced the front and back of the paper patterns using a mannequin head to create the bulkiness

The initial sample toile developed for shaping

The back panels are cut and tested with 1CM seam allowance

Both the front and back will be joined with webbing and belt buckles

Made more head space around the hood area.
