Throughout history, some things on Earth have changed, but time has never stopped its pace, leaving countless traces on everything around us. These traces, some obvious, some subtle, seem to be telling stories and witnessing all the changes. "The Marks of Time" is exactly what I want to present to the audience by capturing those moments that have been overlooked, forgotten, and sculpted by time through the lens.

In the various corners of London, time sweeps over every place, leaving patchy marks. Whether it's graffiti on the wall, rust on old buildings, or traces left by life, every person and detail is showcasing the passage of time and the accumulation of history. The inspiration for this photobook comes from a simple yet profound idea: time can leave its mark on anything, and I hope that these photos will draw the audience's attention to these traces of time and encourage them to pause and reflect on the relationship between time, history, and human activity, and refocus their attention on human beings and their surroundings.

leaving traces of art in the streets

01. Statuary mark
Statues that were built at a very early time have also been attached with distinctive traces through the evolution of different times

o6. Litter
Win some public places with many people, some people will not abide by the norms and arbitrarily dispose of garbage, perhaps this electric box is also a kind of garbage can

I saw these signs on the railings around the gardens of Buckingham Palace and noticed interesting different marks on the same signs

o0. transfer

The abandoned stores are covered with advertisements for the sale, which are very eye-catching

o0. dust
The presence of a lot of dust indicates that the vehicle has traveled far from the city

The vertical rust on the wall shows reddish-brown corrosion, in stark contrast to the rough concrete

Some grass also grows where the installation is connected to the land, even if the grass has long since withered

o10.      SIGN
When the logo of the flower on the ground has also experienced wind and rain, it has left a special trace

01. CUTS

Even in the tall trees there are signs of cuts

00. CUTS

The cross section of the branch perfectly shows the cut marks

01. street
Even on the streets, it is not difficult to find some traces left by humans.
